“ My dear friend Mrs. Meacham, I will miss your gracious hospitality more than anything.

You welcomed me into your family the first time I entered your home in Fremont.

I made your home my second home, and you never took issue with my decision....(well maybe a few times when I was 17 and at the height of my pompous teenage arrogance)

I knew the name adults called you was Jean....but never in my 45 years of knowing you would I have dared to call you anything other than Mrs. Meacham. I respected you too much to ever be so rude.

It was the same for Mr. Meacham.

It was who you were.

I recall fondly the stealth ninja quality you possessed when you silently crept into Brenda's room when she and I were in there as teenagers.

I'm not sure who I feared most....you or Mr. Meacham.

I can assure you Brenda and I were always on our best behavior for fear of invoking the wrath of the wooden spoon I'm sure you had at the ready.

I spent countless hours at your home and enjoyed every moment of it. This was in large part to your kind heart, and generous nature.

I trust you and Mr. Meacham are together with Brenda Gayle and all of you are basking in the warmth of the sun.
